Managing Director Profile

Sue Johnson FCIPD

A career HR specialist, I undertook HR management roles in blue chip organisations across a number of service sectors before setting up my own consultancy. My experience across the specialist fields of employment law, equal opportunities and diversity culminated in responsibility for diversity training strategy and investigations management in the UK for a global bank. This combination of technical depth and commercial experience enables me to add significant value in resolving client issues.

My work has encompassed development of organisational diversity strategies, design and delivery of training, investigations and facilitation of employee awareness programmes.

My training input is based on my extensive experience of dealing successfully with organisational issues for major companies. This has covered race, religion, disability and sex discrimination as well as wider harassment and bullying issues. The internal training programme for investigators which I ran as part of my global bank role was recognised as representing best practice by the Equal Opportunities Commission.

I have managed or conducted numerous investigations with a team of up to 50 investigators, providing expert advice from investigation inception to handling outcomes to the investigators and to the senior management teams responsible for decision making.
